DISSERTATION

“AGENDA SETTING BY INTRAPARTY FACTIONS IN THE U.S. CONGRESS” My dissertation focuses on the role of intraparty factions, like the House Freedom Caucus or the New Democrat Coalition, in Congress. I ask, to what extent do intraparty factions have systematic effects on Congress’ policy agenda? To address this question I collect and code the policy agendas of every intraparty faction from 2001-2018, producing an original data set of over 15,000 agenda items. These data reveal the asymmetric nature of the legislative parties with Republican intraparty factions battling over a small set of ideologically charged issues and Democratic intraparty factions engaging in diverse agendas consistent with their “big tent” coalition. I argue—and find evidence—that intraparty factions provide a vital avenue for rank-and-file members to extract policy concessions from party leaders in a highly centralized power structure.
